North Arlington High School Student Invited to Serve as Junior Commissioner for the Commission on the Status of Women of Bergen County

North Arlington High School student, Taylor Willis has been invited to serve as a Junior Commissioner on the prestigious Commission on the Status of Women for Bergen County. This competitive and sought after position is an exciting challenge for Taylor who also serves as Drum Major for North Arlington High School's marching band. "I am really excited to be a part of something bigger than me and to not only change the lives of other women, but mine as well. It is an amazing feeling when you are able to contribute to your community in a positive way, and being a part of the Bergen County Junior Commission makes that possible for me" said Willis. Founded in 1975, the Bergen County Commission on the Status of Women examines the needs of women and explores methods to expand women's rights by bridging the gap between government and community. The Junior Commission was established in 2000 to assist and inspire young women to become involved in civic engagement. Junior Commissioners serve one year terms.
